SECOND SUNDAY OF ADVENT - YEAR A

ST THERESE OF LISIEUX CATHOLIC PARISH MOONAH LUTANA IS COMMITTED TO PROVIDING A SAFE AND NURTURING CULTURE FOR ALL PEOPLE IN OUR PARISH.

Alleluia Every Day

Someplace along the way, in the early years of my growing up, I heard someone explain that people who went to heaven would sit at the throne of God and sing, "Alleluia," all day long. "Oh, no," I groaned inwardly. At that moment, heaven, however important it remained in my young mind, lost some of its immediacy, if not some of its lustre.

Then, I grew up and realised the import of what it really meant to be able to sing alleluia all day long, every day of your life. The very thought of it spun my world in an audacious new direction. What if life itself was meant to be one long alleluia moment? Here, indeed, resided the real meaning, the real hope, of life. But was it possible?

How is it possible to say alleluia to the parts of life that weigh us down, that drain our spirits dry, that seem to deserve anything but praise?

The question is a worthy one. Life, after all, is a struggle, a journey in uncharted space, an exercise in both gain and loss, joy and sorrow. No life consists of nothing but success and satisfaction, security and self-gratification. Failure and disappointment, loss and pain, are natural parts of the human equation. Then what use is an alleluia, except perhaps to encourage some kind of emotionally unhealthy self-deception?

But alleluia is not a substitute for reality. It is simply the awareness of another whole kind of reality—beyond the immediate, beyond the delusional, beyond the instant perception of things. In the Hebrew Scriptures, the word is an injunction to praise, a call to the people to summon up praise in themselves. It is a challenge to see in life more than is seeable in any single moment and to trust it. In the Christian Scriptures, it is a formula of praise. Most of all, it is an intensely emotional response that, in early liturgical use, was said the entire year, even in liturgies. In the most ancient part of the tradition, then, it calls us to see all of life as life-giving, somehow, in some way, whether its present gifting is apparent or not.

Every segment of life is both gift and challenge, both endowment and responsibility. We lurch back and forth between total confidence and abject despair, between security and uncertainty, between the enrichment that comes from differences and the divisions that come from fear. It is learning to cling to a sense of alleluia for both that carries us through life to that moment when everything in us has come to fullness and our only next step is immersion in God.

Alleluia is a call to reflection, the basis of contemplation, the final "Amen," to all that is.

The Holy Gift of Awareness

All of life is a sacred adventure in the coming of the Reign of God, a journey to fullness of life rather than its denunciation. Yet many still follow the privatisation of the spiritual life that blossomed in the nineteenth century. They still cling to the notion that the purpose of the spiritual life is to enable people to flee the sully of secularism of the world for the sake of personal sanctification. It is a spirituality that “practices” religion but does not identify with the Gospel messages that embody it.

If there is anything about the prophetic dimension of life that is clear, it is surely this: more people decline to accept the appointment than embrace it. As much as the church across time has recognised the role of prophets as charismatic carriers of the word of God for humankind, as much as prophetic religious groups have left behind them models and ministries enough to rebuild the world from century to century, an old heresy remains. The struggle to escape the world - to avoid conflict and let things take care of themselves - stays strong in us.

We have lost the holy gift of awareness of the world’s needs that the prophets brought to fullness. We have overlooked what the prophets knew best: the time most germane to our own sanctification is now. What we do and say, see and respond to, in our own day is the real seed of our own sanctification. It is the times we live in that are our call to courage.

No doubt about it: The purpose of prophecy is to leaven the world, to bring it closer to the Reign of God one small step at a time. The quality of life we create around us as followers of Jesus is meant to seed new life, new hope, new dynamism, the very essence of a new world community.

No exception is made for anyone. None of us, however isolated from the rest of life, is forgiven the responsibility. But how can it possibly be done by busy people with family and professional lives to live? The truth is that it’s actually not difficult.

To be spiritually mature, we must each be about something greater than ourselves. Every local area is being affected by great global movements. To own the implications of prophetic spirituality in the Christian life, we must think beyond our own small world to the effects other issues are having on the local area and make a response to them - with others or alone.

It has been said that every community has at least one prophet. The poet Mary Oliver may have written the best definition of what it means to be a prophet in contemporary spirituality. She writes, “Instructions for living a life: Pay attention. Be astonished. Tell about it.”

PREPARE THE WAY OF THE LORD

Isaiah 11:1-10, Romans 15:4-9, Matthew 3:1-12

The Good News starts with John the Baptist. He is the first to proclaim God's Kingdom. He announces it in the desert, the place where our faith is tested and where we encounter God. In the Old Dispensation, the people of Israel had to cross the desert to come to the promised land. This implies a change of attitude, a conversion. Without conversion it is impossible to welcome Christ. Baptism is a sign of that change of heart, of conversion.

The Pharisees and Sadducees come to John; but he refuses to receive them. John finds that the politically powerful and the wealthy are not able to accept the kingdom. He is asking for a change that is not merely formal. It is not simply carrying out mere external rituals. John demands that they 'bear fruit worthy of repentance.' (3:8)

Our actions determine our lives. Any tree that does not bear fruit will be cut down. There is either wheat or chaff (3:12), acceptance or rejection. There is no idle ground. John precedes Jesus in time. Yet, we who come after him must also have something of the forerunner. Bearing witness to the reign of God consists in preparing for the Lord's coming. Welcoming our neighbour is the condition and the expression of Christ's welcoming us. (Rom 15:7)

Isaiah, quoted by John, reminds us, that the Messiah 'will judge the poor with righteousness.' (11:4) Justice is part of John's proclamation. This puts him in opposition to the powerful leaders of his time. In Isaiah, God's kingdom expresses a world of profound peace and harmony. The beautiful images taken from a rural setting simply reinforce this proclamation (11:6-9). The establishment of justice is an indispensable condition of the kingdom.

This struggle for peace and justice goes on today in so many countries. Struggling for peace means also struggling for justice. Many have paid the price of this with their lives. Those who have given their lives are also precursors of Jesus as John was. They are calling us to convert and to prepare the way for the advent of the Lord.
